With its varied atmospheres, one part marked by its imposing medieval castle, the other by the Tuscan airs around La Garenne Lemot (an Italianate villa), Clisson is also, surprisingly, home to one of Europe's largest and loudest musical festivals, heavy-metal Hellfest! Continuing from Clisson to Nantes, the Vélidéale dawdles through the Muscadet area's vineyards, with lovely bucolic views not just of vines, but also of delightful heritage sites dotted along the Sèvre Nantaise Valley, including the Gué du Moulin d'Angreviers and perched old manors. A veritable green lung on the edge of the sprawling metropolis, the river guides you right up to Nantes, past such tempting spots as La Chaussée des Moines at Vertou, where a hungry or thirsty cyclist can easily find a terrace at which to sit and be served. The green cultural trail known as the Voyage à Nantes then takes over as your guide, leading you along a path peppered with startling outdoor art installations towards the capital of central western France, Nantes. The Sèvre Nantaise River is the last major tributary to join the Loire before its estuary, reaching the mighty river at the great metropolis, after which you'll carry on your cycle route due west beside the Loire.

The route

In Clisson, the Vélidéale leads you past the square in front of the train station, then on via a network of streets with traffic-calming measures, on to a greenway along a railway line. Reaching the village of Gorges, the route descends along the RD113 road, so moderate your speed on this stretch shared with motorized traffic. Having crossed the Sèvre Nantaise River, take the first left, towards Angreviers. The route then alternates between quiet roads and tracks through vineyards, with some steep slopes to tackle in the parish of Le Pallet. Take care on the short stretch of a few metres that you have to take along the RD149 road to reach the Musée du Vignoble Nantais, a topical museum, then a bit later along the RD7 road, before turning left towards Port Domino, followed by La Haye Fouassière.

Reaching Vertou via the Rue des Ouches, again be vigilant along the few metres you need to ride along on the M50, then join the La Ville Bachelier road, offering beautiful viewpoints up to the old village of Le Portillon, boasting a remarkable architectural heritage. You need to ride along Rue de la Pierre Percée to reach the banks of the Sèvre Nantaise. Do consider leaving the route to the right to take the little chain ferry over to the Château de la Frémoire, a wonderful place to enjoy a tasting along the local Voyage dans le Vignoble trail. The cycle route itself continues alongside the Sèvre Nantaise, leading you across public gardens up to the unique, historic Chaussée des Moines in Vertou. After that, continue to follow the signage for La Vélidéale and the course of the Sèvre Nantaise. Cross at the Pont de la Morinière to switch riverbank and enter the waterside meadows in Rezé, startling to find on the edge of the big city of Nantes.

The bridge called the Pont des Trois Continents is where our cycle route connects up with both the La Vélodyssée - EuroVelo 1 and La Loire à Vélo - Eurovelo 6 cycle routes. If you want to follow the EuroVelo 1 northwards, or the EuroVelo 6 eastwards, or simply to reach the centre of Nantes, cross the bridge. Otherwise, continue along the next stretch that the three cycle routes share in common.

Don't miss

- Clisson : the ruined medieval castle dominating one river bank, with the historic town below including fine timberframe covered market and shops; on the other river bank, the Domaine de la Garenne Lemot, an Italianate neo-classical manor turned art and history museum, with follies dotted around the grounds descending to the river; the riverbanks themselves, with an historic stone bridge connecting both sides.
- Vertou: the Château de la Frémoire, a folly of a Nantes country house, turned centre on Muscadet wines, with fine dining possible; La Chaussée des Moines, an enchanting stretch of the Sèvre Nantaise River, with a ford built by medieval monks, while in recent times, the area has been undergoing renovation to make it a beautiful calm area, banning cars and encouraging biodiversity, but remaining a popular spot to visit, with restaurants.
- Rezé: the meadows beside the Sèvre Nantaise River; the Parc de la Morinière, waterside public gardens
- Nantes: approaching the metropolis from the south, spot the special breed of local cows, vaches nantaises, grazing at Les Roches Vertes, on the banks of the Sèvre Nantaise.
