On this stage of the Vélidéale cycle route, you ride off from the Pays Mellois area making use of a greenway called the Ruban Vert (or Green Ribbon), taking you along a raised former railway line, up to Prahecq. This stretch proves both peaceful and accessible to most. Then, to shift from the Mellois area to the Niortais, it's only a short stretch, through a tunnel of greenery in the warmer seasons. You reach the centre of the city of Niort via the Avenue de Limoges, cycling up to La Brèche, a major public park, and Le Port Boinot, the river port, both providing important green spaces for the town. Plus, you're now on the edge of the splendid Marais Poitevin marshes.

The route

The Ruban Vert greenway leading you out of the Mellois area to the Niort area provides a wonderfully green, refreshing artery, taking you riding along a former railway line. You head for Celles-sur-Belle, a fine little town designated a Petite Cité de Caractère for its heritage. Continue along the same greenway up to Prahecq, where you'll be welcomed by the Château de la Voûte and its grounds, offering a fine spot to take a break before tackling the final part of this stage. You soon arrive in the city of Niort, one of the gateways to the Parc Naturel Régional du Marais Poitevin.
